Annual report 2015

Introduction

ARENA Centre for European Studies is an internationally regarded research centre at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Oslo. The centre conducts theoretically oriented, empirically informed basic research on the dynamics of the evolving European political order. Our research is organised along four key dimensions of European political order: the democratic dimension; the EU's executive dimension; the knowledge dimension and the external dimension.

This report extensively outlines ARENA's activities in 2015, which proved a remarkable year in several regards.

The 2015 publication rate exceeded that of previous years. Our staff continuously succeed in disseminating high-level research through peer-reviewed publications. Amorgst these were two special issues of academic journals and the Palgrave Handbook of the European Administrative System. Against the backdrop of the upcoming Brexit referendum, the book The European Union's Non-members also gained increased relevance outside academia.

Moreover, in stark competition, ARENA succeeded in attracting several new project grants. The GLOBUS project funded by the EU's Horizon 2020 is one of the most extensive ones in ARENA's history. The project is led by Helene Sjursen and will analyse the concept of global justice and examine the EU's role as a global actor. It brings together expertise from eight partner universities worldwide and will be launched in 2016. Another project that won through in 2015 is Cathrine Holst and Johan Christensen's EUREX project, which is to assess the role of expertise in policy-making. Funded by the Research Council of Norway, EUREX will also start in 2016.

ARENA's participation in the international research networks ANTERO, PACO and TARN all commenced in 2015, and we are looking forward to fruitful partnerships in the years to come.

Last, but certainly not least, Professor Emeritus Johan P. Olsen was elected fellow of the US National Academy of Public Administration. This is a recognition of ARENA's founder's outstanding record of public administration scholarship.

Integration and division Towards a segmented Europe?

The aim of EuroDiv is to provide more knowledge on the implications of the current crisis and on possible ways out of the crisis.

About

What are the implications of the current European crisis for democracy and integration in a long-term perspective? What does it mean that countries both within and without the EU are integrated to different degrees? The assumption of the project Integration and division: Towards a segmented Europe? (EuroDiv) is that Europe is moving towards a permanent situation characterised by a more diversified EU.

Objectives

EuroDiv aims to establish how the crisis is transforming Europe and the implications this has for Norway as a closely associated non-member of the EU. Greater differentiation may give rise to particular patterns of segmentation with profound democratic and constitutional implications. EuroDiv seeks to establish how prevalent such segmentation trends are and whether there are important – democratic – countervailing forces.

A major objective is therefore to identify what the democratic and constitutional implications are of current patters of transformation, what they entail for the sustainability of the European political order, and Norway's role in relation to it.

Sub-projects

EuroDiv consists of four sub-projects, studying various aspects of differentiation in Europe. Law and democracy investigates the characteristics, scope and implications of the Eurozone crisis and its democratic and constitutional implications. The European executive order analyses the impact of the crisis on administrative systems at the EU and national levels. Economic development as segmentation studies important changes in the design of the monetary union and if these developments contribute to further segmentation. The fourth sub-project studies differentiated integration in the domain of foreign, security and defence policy.

Activities in 2015

Members from all four sub-projects presented their research at national and international academic events, produced a number of academic publications and gave media contributions. Several research seminars were staged at ARENA. The research activities and preliminary findings, with a particular focus on the executive order and foreign and security policy, were presented at the annual meeting of the Europe in Transition projects staged by the Research Council of Norway (see p. 53).

Key project publications in 2015 include a special issue of the Journal of European Public Policy on differentiated integration. In this issue EuroDiv researchers focus on the democratic challenges of patterns of integration and disintegration actualized by the euro crisis, and develop a systematic normative analysis of where differentiated integration may need justification, and by what standards (see p. 20). Moreover, the edited volume The European Union's Non-Members: Independence under hegemony was published. A key question in the book is whether states closely affiliated with the EU, but which have chosen not to be full members, experience negative effects on their legal and political self-governing abilities, or whether they manage their independence with few such effects (see p. 14).

Why not epistocracy? Political legitimacy and 'the fact of expertise'

The EPISTO project examines and assesses the legitimacy of expert rule in modern democracies with a particular focus on the EU and European Commission expert groups.

About

The EU has recently taken unprecedented administrative and legal measures to address threats of terror, the euro crisis, and environmental challenges. Critics claim that the Union's crisis management contributes to pushing the EU further towards technocracy and expert-rule. Is Europe abandoning democracy as we know it? And if so, is this a problem?

A key question for the project Why not epistocracy? Political legitimacy and 'the fact of expertise' (EPISTO) is how to combine democratic procedures with the demands for knowledge-based politics and wide use of experts and expertise. 'Epistocracy' refers to 'rule of the knowers', and EPISTO elaborates on arguments for expert-rule. tests the soundness of their empirical assumptions, and develops a normative defence of democracy in Europe that specifies the legitimate role and scope of expert power.

Objectives

EPISTO will elaborate on different dimensions of knowledge-based rule and develop a typology for epistocracy. The proper standards for assessing the normative legitimacy of expertise arrangements will be discussed and identified. The project will map and analyse the European Commission's expert group system, its composition and powers with the aim to study expertise behaviour, deliberation and rationality. This system's normative legitimacy will be discussed and assessed in light of empirical findings.

Activities in 2015

A typology for the classification and evaluation of expertise-based arguments has been developed, and project leader Cathrine Holst has discussed solutions in terms of 'mechanisms for holding experts to account'. The European Commission's use of expertise has been analysed by project members, and a range of interviews and analyses of key documents on the Commission's use of research and expertise has been undertaken. The project's database with information on the Commission's expert group system has been completed.

The project team has published a range of articles. in journals such as Critical Review of International Social and Political Philosophy, Acta Sociologica, and West European Politics, as well as a special issue of Politics and Governance (see p. 20). EPISTO's research was presented at a number of seminars and conferences, and participants were invited to several workshops, nationally and internationally. Cathrine Holst has established strong ties to the Quality of Government (QoG) institute at the University of Gothenburg, and preparations are under way for two

EPISTO workshops in 2016: One panel in cooperation with Bo Rothstein (QoG Gøteborg and Oxford University) entitled 'Was Plato Right? European flagship universities: Balancing academic excellence and socio-economic relevance

The FLAGSHIP project examines and compares the strategies of Norwegian and other Western European universities in adapting to a global context that requires a better balance between academic excellence and socio-economic relevance.

About

European Flaaship Universities: Balancina Academic Excellence and Socio-Economic Relevance (FLAGSHIP) examines the ways in which European flagship universities have adapted over the last ten years to far-reaching changes in their political and socio-economic environments, and the extent to which these adaptations are initiated and implemented by the institutional leadership or as a consequence of external change drivers.

A flagship university is defined as a comprehensive research-intensive university, located in one of its country's largest urban areas. A flagship university is in general among the oldest and largest institutions for higher learning of its country.

Objectives

FLAGSHIP's overall objective is to produce relevant insights into the way in which selected flagship universities in Europe interpret and use their institutional autonomy in creating an effective balance between strengthening the excellence and securing the socio-economic relevance of their academic activities.

The project addresses the following two questions: What are the organised settings and institutional characteristics that attract highly qualified staff and students, encourage academic excellence and free enquiry and also make universities take seriously their social and economic responsibilities? What are the main factors that over the last ten years have affected these organised university settings and institutional characteristics?

The project contributes to a better understanding of how the organisational adaptations of Norwegian universities compare to those of universities in other small Western European countries. FLAGSHIP further contributes to the discussion on the autonomy of Norwegian universities and university colleges, as well as to the strengthening of the knowledge basis of Norwegian knowledge area policies, especially in the areas of research and innovation.

Activities in 2015

The first project phase (2011-12) was dedicated to analysing European-level policy developments as well as national-level legal, financial-economic, and political traditions and realities. The strategic room to manoeuvre for flagship universities were then examined in eleven selected universities: Copenhagen, Helsinki, Oslo, Stockholm, Amsterdam, Leuven, Vienna, Zurich, Warsaw and Melbourne. These institutional reports are available from the project website.

Opening ceremony at Universitetsplassen, University of Oslo

In the second phase (2013-14), detailed case studies at the departmental level were undertaken in four fields: Chemistry, Psychology, Public Health, and Teacher Education. Investigating the practices of institutional autonomy at the shop-floor level, the project observed how formal changes through reforms and regulations intertwine with managerial intentionality (e.g. strategic planning) and institutional settings (structures, routines, cultures and identities), both in the area of personnel policies and research management.

As the project came towards an end in 2015. project members were particularly active in their outreach to stakeholders and held presentations at major international conferences such as the European Consortium for Political Research (ECPR) General Conference and the European Educational Research Association's ECER 2015 Conference. Several peer-reviewed articles in academic journals and books were published.

Other projects

In addition to projects coordinated by ARENA, the centre's researchers participate in a number of other international projects and networks.

Parliamentary Democracy in Europe (PADEMIA)

The motivation of PADEMIA is to establish a Europewide and sustainable network of 56 academic institutions from 31 countries to promote research and teaching in reaction to growing European demands to study parliamentary democracy in Europe.

PADEMIA seeks to enhance discussion among students, junior and senior researchers, also in exchange with stakeholders, on how to deal with the new challenges parliaments and citizens across Europe are facing today. The network responds to the 'Future of Europe' report which identifies '(t)he on-going sovereign debt crisis and the ever accelerating process of globalization (as) an unprecedented dual challenge for Europe': but also addresses the implications the Lisbon Treaty and further formal agreements (e.g., Fiscal Compact) have for parliamentary democracy in Europe whose complex, multi-level character furthermore requires thorough and comprehensive reflection.

Interparliamentary Cooperation in the EU's External Action (PACO)

Interparliamentary Cooperation in the EU's external action – Parliamentary Scrutiny and Diplomacy in the EU and beyond (PACO) brings together three interrelated teaching and research areas: EU external relations, inter-parliamentary cooperation and parliamentary diplomacy.

PACO aims to discover and explain if and why inter-parliamentary cooperation in the field of external relations (CFSP/CSDP, human rights, development, trade, etc.) has contributed towards increased scrutiny by the EP and national parliaments; and if and why parliamentary diplomacy can add to the diplomatic tool set (i.e. public diplomacy) in the EU's co-

Addressing the Needs on Teaching, Education and Research in EU Foreign Policy (ANTERO)

One of the challenges the EU is confronted with is that of internal and external legitimacy. On internal legitimacy, the Union has been faced with a clear decline in popularity among its citizens. In terms of its external legitimacy, survey figures show that the EU is a largely unknown actor among the citizens of many third countries. Moreover, those who know the EU are far from unanimously positive about its impact on their country or on international affairs.

ANTERO studies the effectiveness, coherence. and success of the EU as an international actor where both internal and external legitimacy play critical roles. It aims to strengthen the interaction between research in the field of EU foreign policy and the translation of that research through innovative, research-led teaching.

The Academic Research Network on Agencification of EU Executive Governance (TARN)

TARN is a Europe-wide network of nine academic partners including a multidisciplinary group of scholars from law, social and political sciences and public administration. It aims to contribute to a better understanding of agencification of EU executive governance and to foster dialogue between academics and practitioners to improve scholarship and practice. TARN addresses the many facets of the problems posed by the process of agencification in the EU. It concentrates on three pressing concerns: constitutionality, powers and legitimacy of EU agencies; the role of EU agencies as global actors, and; EU agencies' functional operation and effectiveness.

Research and Expertise in Society

ARENA cooperates with the Centre for European Studies at Jagiellonian University in Kraków in establishing a postgraduate research track within an MA programme in European Studies in Kraków: Central and Eastern European Studies: Research Track.

The specialization is an innovative combination of theory and practical set of skills. Courses are led by academic specialists as well as experts from the private and public sectors. It will allow the students to learn about the mechanism of how the scientific research can be transferred into actions conducive to the development of economy, society and democracy which they will then be able to implement during their internship in NGOs, public or private institutions and companies. The aim is to educate top experts in the field, conscious of their role and responsibilities as researchers.

Democratic Governance and Differentiation in Europe

Slovakia and Norway are examples of countries with various degrees of integration into the EU's political order. A comparative approach using the two country contexts as a point of departure and extending the research scope towards other country contexts in Europe and beyond provides a fertile ground for the study of differentiation and democratic governance in today's Europe.

The current project addresses this issue area and seeks to establish lasting cooperation between Comenius University as the leading political science milieu in Slovakia and ARENA at the University of Oslo as a leading European centre of research excellence on democratic governance in Europe.

The project sets up frameworks for the transfer of a successful set of best practices in managing research and teaching excellence on the PhD level in the field of democratic governance. Project activities include lectures, PhD courses, common publications and a guest researcher's scheme at ARENA.

The European Union's Non-Members: Independence under Hegemony?

Erik Oddvar Eriksen and John Erik Fossum (eds) Routledge, ISBN: 9781138922457

The EU is a supranational organization, whose reach and influence extends well beyond its member states, especially to the many states that have signed various forms of association agreements with it.

This book asks whether qualifying states who have eschewed EU membership experience negative effects on their legal and political self-governing abilities, or whether they manage their independence with few such effects. It explores the idea that the closer the affiliation a non-member state has with the EU. the more susceptible to hegemony the relationship appears to be. In addition, the book provides an overview of the total range of agreements the EU has with non-member states.

The Palgrave Handbook of the European Administrative System

Michael W. Bauer and Jarle Trondal (eds) Palgrave Macmillan, ISBN: 9781137339881

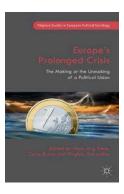

This volume examines the emerging bureaucratic framework which underpins the European Union and in doing so constitutes a primer on the administrative system of the EU.

Drawing on the latest research from the administrative sciences and using organizational, institutional, and decision-making theories, this volume highlights that analyzing the patterns and dynamics of the administrative capacities of the EU is essential in understanding how the EU shapes European public policy. Accordingly, this study does not examine administrative capacities in isolation but rather analyzes them as structures that mobilize systematic bias in the production of public policy.

This layout allows the chapters to tackle pressing questions about the nature of the EU's emerging bureaucracy such as to what extent, how, and under what conditions do administrative systems change and complement pre-existing public administration systems? Can new administrative systems profoundly transform pre-existing ones? And, what are the principled implications of an emergent new European administrative system?

Europe's Prolonged Crisis: The Making or the Unmaking of a Political Union

Hans-Jörg Trenz, Carlo Ruzza and Virginie Guiraudon (eds)

Palgrave Macmillan, ISBN: 9781137493675

This volume outlines a political sociology of crisis in Europe, focusing on state and society transformations in the context of the 2008 financial and monetary crisis and its aftermath in Europe. Dysfunctions of the market and the European economic and monetary system pose severe challenges to the legitimacy of political order at national, European and global level.

In this collection, the contributors investigate how the crisis undermines the integrity of political institutions and democratic government at EU and member state level, and analyse how the experiences of social deprivation are translated into political conflict and cleavages across the European space. Evidence is provided for how the return of redistributive conflicts correlates with a 'new politics of identity', nationalism, regionalism and expressions of Euroscepticism. Crisis affects patterns of social exclusion but, as this book reveals, it can also activate social networks and impacts on new forms of solidarity, which are emerging locally and transnationally.

Hva er EU godt for?

Erik Oddvar Eriksen

Cappelen Damm Akademisk, ISBN: 9788202494506

After World War II, European countries joined forces in a committed relationship, which it is now difficult to withdraw from. The EU is here to stay. How was this possible? And what is the EU good for?

The book reconstructs the European integration process and identifies the normative commitments that the EU is founded on: human rights, impartiality, democracy, and dignity. The goal has always been a peaceful and united Europe – a Europe without humiliation. With the financial and sovereign debt crisis, however, humiliation is brought back in. This is due to the structural defects of the Eurozone: the Union does not have the competence to decide in social and economic matters, which remains within the remit of the member states. Further integration is therefore necessary to resolve the crisis and to realize Europe's unfulfilled obligation of solidarity.

I kjølvannet av andre verdenskrig ble de europeiske landene knyttet sammen i et forpliktende samarbeid det nå er vanskelig å tre ut av. EU er kommet for å bli. Hvordan ble dette mulig? Og hva er EU godt for?

Boka rekonstruerer den europeiske integrasjonsprosessen, samtidig som de normative forpliktelsene EU er tuftet på identifiseres: menneskerettigheter, upartiskhet, demokrati og verdighet. Målet har hele tiden vært et fredelig og forent Europa – et Europa uten ydmykelse. Med finanskrise og statsgjeld er imidlertid ydmykelsene tilbake. Dette skyldes eurosonens strukturfeil, nemlig at fellesskapet ikke har kompetanse og myndighet til å bestemme i sosiale og økonomiske saker. Nye integrasjonssteg er derfor nødvendig for å løse krisa og for å realisere Europas uinnfridde forpliktelse om solidaritet.

A Different Kind of Democracy? Debates About Democracy and the European Union

Christopher Lord (ed.)

Open Society Foundations, ISBN: 9781940983295

Democracy is the only legitimate form of political power in societies that regard individuals as free and equal. Yet many have doubted whether the European Union is, can be, or should be democratic. Is the EU unsustainable in its present form? Must it either take a precarious gamble on forming a full democratic political system of its own or, as some have argued, downsize so that it can be controlled by its member state democracies?

A Different Kind of Democracy? helps answer these questions by bringing together some of the most important contributions to the literature on democracy and the European Union. It includes arguments for and against the claim that the EU is in democratic deficit; reflections on the possibilities and problems of forming an EU demos (democratic political community); and proposals for how the Union might be made democratic.

Each of these topics is introduced by a careful analysis of the normative and practical questions it poses. As well as being of interest to scholars of European integration, the reader is indispensable to all with an interest in prospects for democracy beyond the state.

The contributors to the volume are Richard Bellamy, Erik Oddvar Eriksen, John Erik Fossum, Dieter Grimm, Ulrich Haltern, Christopher Lord, Neil MacCormick, Peter Mair, Giandomenico Majone, G. Frederico Mancini, Franz Mayer, Andrew Moravcsik, Fritz W. Scharpf, and Joseph H.H. Weiler.

Rett og politikk: nye perspektiver på demokratiets forutsetninger, utforming og grenser

Jan Fridthjof Bernt, Cathrine Holst and Steinar Stjernø (eds)

Pax Forlag, ISBN: 9788253037905

What is the relationship between law and politics, today and in historical perspective? Where are the limits of democracy, and where are the limits of juridification and expert rule? How do politics and society influence the judiciary, and how does the judiciary constrain democracy and social development? What are the qualities of our present system, and what can be criticized?

The book 'Law and Politics: New Perspectives on the Prerequisites for Democracy' encourages debate about the constitution, government and fundamental traits of our state and society. It is dedicated to Prof. Rune Slagstad for 'his long-lasting, comprehensive and multi-faceted contribution to intellectual discussion and Norwegian research and society'.

Hva er forholdet mellom rett og politikk - i dag og i et historisk perspektiv? Hvor går grensene for demokratiet - og hvor går grensene for rettsliggjøring og ekspertstyre? Hvordan påvirker politikk og samfunn retten - og hvordan legger retten rammer for demokrati og samfunnsutvikling? Hvilke gode kvaliteter har vårt styresett slik det fungerer i dag og hva er kritikkverdig?

Bokas artikler inviterer til prinsipiell debatt om styreform, konstitusjon og grunnleggende trekk ved stat og samfunn. Temaene spenner fra likestilling, religion og ytringsfrihet til strafferett, trygd og helse. De beveger seg fra det interne livet på Stortinget og i Høyesterett før og nå til krisen i Europa, EØS og menneskerettighetenes «sakralisering», fra Eidsvoll og Kristiania til Strasbourg og Brussel.

Redaktørene har dedikert boken til professor Rune Slagstad «for hans langvarige, omfattende og mangesidige bidrag til intellektuell diskusjon, norsk forskning og samfunnsliv».

Differentiated integration in the European Union

Journal of European Public Policy Vol. 22, no. 6

Christopher Lord and Benjamin Leruth (eds)

Differentiation has been a feature of European integration for more than two decades. More than half of EU policies are implemented in different ways. Recent debates over a potential British exit from the EU revived discussions on the future of European integration, offering a potential case for disintegration. Yet scholars and practitioners still find it difficult to define the notion.

This collection offers a survey of the literature on differentiated integration, its most recent developments and justifies why the study of differentiation needs to move up the research agenda of European integration. The editors suggest that studying differentiated integration as a concept, a process, a system and a theory is the minimum needed to understand it, and demonstrate the necessity to study differentiation as a permanent and 'normal' feature of European integration.

The role of expert knowledge in EU executive institutions

Politics and Governance Vol. 3, no. 1

Åse Gornitzka and Cathrine Holst (eds)

Expertise has played a pivotal role in EU executives since the Union was established, but its significance is arguably increasing and takes on new shapes. This issue explores the role and use of expert knowledge in decision-making in and by EU executive institutions.

Developments in the EU are decisive for executive organisation and politics in Europe, in particular due to the position of the European Commission as the EU's executive centre, but also because of the growing number of EU-level agencies. What characterizes EU's executive organizations' reliance on expert advice and judgment? How is the use of expertise organized? And what are the implications of expertise organisation for experts' performance and interactions, policy outcomes, institutional dynamics and democratic legitimacy?

The British self and the continental other: a discourse analysis of the United Kingdom's relationship with Europe

ARENA Report 15/01

John Todd

This report provides an accessible yet comprehensive analysis of how the British discourse on Europe has evolved over the past forty years.

Prime Minister David Cameron's commitment to hold a referendum on European Union membership in 2017, should his party win the next general election, was a major political milestone. The report examines the changes and continuities in this discourse over three key periods: the 1975 EEC membership referendum, the 1992-3 Maastricht ratification process and the proto-referendum debates of 2013.

The consistent divide between a British self and Continental other over the forty years under analysis has been strongly reinforced by the increasing prominence of anti-immigration rhetoric within the discourse. Overall, Todd notes that the impact of the Eurosceptics' discursive campaign will have a significant impact should a referendum take place in 2017.

Striving for influence: the European Parliament in EU foreign policy

ARENA Report 15/02

Guri Rosén

How can we explain the increase in the European Parliament's (EP) influence in EU foreign policy? Why would member states, in such a sensitive area, be willing to share their powers with Members of the EP over whom they have little, if no, control?

This report studies three cases in detail: one aiming to explain how the EP got access to sensitive documents in the area of security and defense, another on the EP's increasing participation in the CFSP budgetary process, and a third on the EP's new powers in the area of EU external trade policy.

Two mechanisms are key to understand the increase in the EP's influence. Firstly, the Council has accepted the EP's argument that more democratic legitimacy in the area is needed and that the EP therefore should have more influence in foreign policy. Secondly, the EP uses a bargaining strategy as means to arrive at concrete agreements. Linking concessions to areas where it has formal powers has proven successful for the EP.

När smart specialisering kom till Norge: en organisationsteoretisk analys av flernivåinteraktion och EU:s mjukare sida

ARENA report 15/03

Linn Tomasdotter

This report (in Swedish) analyses the interaction between the regional and European level in the implementation of 'smart specialisation', an EU strategy for science and innovation at the regional level.

Why do regional authorities respond to changes within the framework of the European Union?

Tomasdotter analyses the interaction between the Norwegian county administration Nordland and the European Union in the implementation of 'smart specialisation'. She finds that the national and supranational organisational structure has increased the scope of interaction between the regional and European level, making it less dependent on the national level.

Between centralization and decentralization: decision behaviour in the EU's multilevel administrative system

ARENA report 15/04

Nina Merethe Vestlund

What characterizes decision-making in the EU administrative system? This report studies the emerging multilevel EU administration, composed of the European Commission, a growing number of EU agencies and national regulatory authorities. These actors are increasingly connected and integrated across levels of governance and national borders.

What are the effects of these institutional developments? Do they contribute to preserving executive power as decentralized and anchored within member states, or do they contribute to centralizing executive power at the EU level?

Vestlund finds that decision-making in the system increasingly embodies many of the organizational and behavioural patterns that are typical of executives from national settings. Furthermore, executive decision-making behaviour is gradually becoming more centralized, with the European Commission as a core executive. The findings thus challenge existing images that portray the European administrative system as sui generis and executive power as being mainly decentralized.

Events

The Meaning of Partisanship

ARENA and the University of Oslo's Democracy Programme organised a research seminar on Blindern campus on 27 October 2015. The theme for discussion was political parties and the place of partisanship in current democracies.

John Erik Fossum and Anders Ravik Jupskås had invited Jonathan White and Lea Ypi (London School of Economics and Political Science) to present their forthcoming book 'The Meaning of Partisanship', which aims to rejuvenate the theoretical study of partisanship. They had also invited participants from Stanford University. the University of Amsterdam, KU Leuven, the Arctic University of Norway, Oslo and Akershus University College, as well as the University of Oslo's Department of Philosophy, Classics, History of Art and Ideas (IFIKK), the Centre for the Study of the Legitimacy of the International Judiciary (PluriCourts), Department of Political Science and ARENA.

The scholars discussed subjects such as the relation between the partisan and the political community at large, the contribution of partisanship to political life, the relation between the partisan and their party, including the value of commitment and the ethical and organisational ties that underwrite it, and the complex relationship between partisans and political institutions.

Security and Governance in the Globalised Arctic

The international conference Security and Governance in the Globalised Arctic: Nordic and International Perspectives took place in Aarhus on 12-13 November 2015. The MatchPoint Seminar is referred to as the most important Danish foreign policy conference of the past decade.

The goal of the conference was to contribute to reinforcing and developing the existing international collaboration in relation to the Arctic and to help ensure that joint efforts to ensure peace and stability in the region are not undermined by conflict. Danish Minister for Higher Education and Science Esben Lunde Larsen, Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs Kristian Jensen, several ambassadors, American and Russian diplomatic representatives, and prominent researchers from the Arctic coastal states participated in the conference.

The conference was hosted by Aarhus University and the City of Aarhus. It was organized by a number of Nordic universities and academic research academies, including ARENA, University of Oslo. John Erik Fossum chaired the concluding panel debate with international scholars. Among the institutional partners of MatchPoint were the Danish ministries of foreign affairs, defence and research, the Folketing and the Nordic Ministerial Council.

Videos and selected speeches, photos and a Twitter roundup are available at www.matchpoints.au.dk

ANTERO workshop

The education and research network on EU foreign policy, ANTERO, held its first workshop in December.

The first ANTERO event took place in Brussels on 9-11 December 2015. It combined research and teaching sessions on European foreign policy.

The workshop was jointly organised by the University of Leuven, the University of Tampere and the University of Kent, and took place at the premises of the University of Kent's Brussels Campus.

ARENA's foreign policy group contributed with several papers in the research session 'The quest for internal legitimacy of EU external action': Helene Sjursen presented a paper on the legitimacy basis of the EU's foreign and security policy, entitled 'The democratic surplus of deficit?'; Guri Rosén discussed accountability and transparency in the area of security and defense policy in the paper 'A secret worth keeping?'; Tine E. J. Brøgger presented her research on Franco-British security and defence cooperation in her paper 'Inside and outside the EU'; Johanna Strikwerda's approach focused on the European Commission's proposal for a Defence and Security Procurement Directive in the paper 'Sovereignty at stake?'; and finally, Mai'a K. Davis Cross discussed the European External Action Service and counter-terrorism.

The teaching sessions were dedicated to mapping and integrating syllabi on European foreign policy, working towards an ANTERO Syllabus, and a roundtable discussing the needs and objectives of teaching in this field.

The event also included a panel with EU officials identifying blind spots in European foreign policy teaching and research analysis from practitioners' view. Julia De Clerck-Sachsse and Joëlle Hivonnet from the European External Action Service and Gerrard Quille from the European Parliament Mediation Support Service contributed to the panel.

Public Defence: Guri Rosén

On 15 January 2015, Guri Rosén defended her PhD thesis: 'Striving for influence: the European Parliament in EU foreign policy'.

In her thesis, Guri Rosén analyses how the European Parliament (EP) has gradually increased its influence in the field of EU foreign and security policy. The conduct of this policy remains largely sheltered from standard democratic procedures. The EP's claim for more powers in EU foreign policy has been opposed with the argument that national parliaments are equally powerless. At the same time, EU foreign policy, and in particular its Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), is often regarded as an exclusive domain for the member states.

How can we then explain the increase in the EP's influence in EU foreign policy? Why would member states, in such a sensitive area, be willing to share their powers with Members of the European Parliament, over whom they have little, if any, control? Three cases form the backbone of Rosén's thesis, aiming to explain how the EP got access to sensitive documents in the area of security and defence, the Parliament's increasing participation in the CFSP budgetary process, and its new powers in the area of EU external trade policy.

The analyses demonstrate how two mechanisms are key to understanding the EP's increased influence: its appeal to democratic principles, and the bargaining strategy it has pursued by linking concessions to areas where it has formal powers.

'The added value of communicative rationality in explaining and understanding EU foreign policy'

The PhD thesis is published as ARENA Report 2/15

Public Defence: Nina Merethe Vestlund

On 3 September 2015, Nina Merethe Vestlund defended her PhD thesis 'Between centralization and decentralization: decision behaviour in the EU's multilevel administrative system'.

Vestlund has studied decision behaviour within the multilevel EU administration composed of the European Commission, a growing number of EU agencies, as well as networks of national regulatory authorities. These actors are increasingly integrated across levels of governance and national borders, and Vestlund investigates to what extent, how and why organizational factors shape decision-making within and between them. Do the institutional developments contribute to preserve executive power decentralized among member states or do they promote centralized EU executive power?

Overall, her findings suggest that executive decision-making behaviour at the core of the system is gradually becoming normalized; increasingly, it embodies many of the organizational and behavioural patterns highly typical of national executives. Moreover, executive decision-making behaviour is gradually becoming more centralized; it contributes to executive centre formation at the European level by strengthening the capacity of the European Commission.

Vestlund's thesis consists of three journal articles in Public Policy and Administration and Journal of 'The role of expertise in EU governance'

The PhD thesis is published as ARENA Report 4/15

Democracy, expertise and power

As part of the project Research and Expertise in Society (see p. 11), the Centre for European Studies at Jagiellonian University in cooperation with ARENA organised two schools in Cracow for postgraduate students.

Winter School

The role of experts in modern European societies

The Winter School was held on 7-15 February 2015 and took as its point of departure the increasing role of experts and expertise in democracies. Among the questions it dealt with were: Who is an expert? What is knowledge? How can we reconcile expertise with various types of democracy? What is the role of academia in contemporary society and what are the implications of public-private partnership? What is the role of mass/social media in developing social movements and democracy?

Cathrine Holst held lectures on the concept of knowledge-based society, the role of expertise in policy-making and the performance and behaviour of experts. She also discussed the economic crisis and its ensuing political and social problems, and potential ways out of the recession in light of knowledge-based society, democracy and policy-making.

The lectures by Hans-Jörg Trenz focused on digital democracy and the transformation of the public sphere as well as on deliberative democracy and how it can be brought together with mass democracy. A final line of research was provided by Åse Gornitzka, whose two lectures dealt with universities and their role as knowledge institutions, as well as the role of expertise in European policymaking and the link between executive politics and professional expertise in the EU.

Summer School Making a new Europe in the era of alobalisation

The Summer School on 15-24 June 2015 was devoted to analysing the complex relation between globalisation, democracy and power. The students participated at lectures, presentation sessions, debates, and workshops on these themes, as well as on more practically oriented themes such as journalistic editing.

Across Europe, the economic, political, social and cultural spheres are undergoing unrestrained globalisation, which leads to varied consequences within each of these spheres. Developing economies, circulation of goods, services, information and knowledge, diversity, transnational political networks, global social movements and global civil society, are only a few examples of the positive effects of globalisation brought by its supporters. On the other hand, globalisation presents a number of challenges such as fiscal austerity, liberalising capital markets, increasing social inequalities both between the global North and global South and within countries, loss of cultural uniqueness, and human rights violations. The composite reality of a globalised economy, politics and culture has effects on democracy and the concept of power. However, there is little consensus what these effects are.

The Summer School thus asked: How can democracy be built and sustained in Europe? How do we exert power in a global context? What is the role of Europe in new power relations?

Chris Lord held the opening lecture 'Democracy, expertise and power: making Europe in the era of globalisation'. He also lectured on the overall quality, sustainability and legitimacy of democracy in contemporary Europe, and on the nature of the EU's democratic deficit. As part of the latter lecture, he introduced students to different methods of assessing the democratic quality of political systems, and how they can be adapted to the case of the EU.

The link between the Euro crisis and the citizens was reviewed and discussed by Espen Olsen. He also made students familiar with the distinct characteristics of deliberative theory, its contributions to our thinking on democracy, and the latest debates on a so-called systemic turn in the field.

Tatiana Fumasoli in her lecture analysed the challenges for the governance of higher education and research coordination in Europe with a particular focurs on the role of universities.

Erik O. Eriksen 60 years

The 60th anniversary of ARENA director Erik O. Eriksen was celebrated with a surprise seminar on 22 January 2015.

The seminar gathered a range of Eriksen's friends and colleagues from his time in Tromsø, Bergen and Oslo. It had been planned in secret by ARENA colleagues, who had invited James Bohman from St. Louis University in the US and Rainer Smalz-Bruns from Leibniz Universität Hannover to talk about Eriksen's scholarly merits. His friend and colleague Anders Molander, former PhD student Anne Skevik Grødem and son Andreas Eriksen were also on the list of invited speakers.

Combining many roles

John Erik Fossum, who has worked closely with Eriksen for many years, introduced the seminar by stating that 'Erik is one of the most prolific political scientists in Norway, and also among the most productive ones in Europe. He has the capability of filling and combining a variety of roles: scientist, public intellectual, networker, teacher, entrepreneur, research coordinator, evaluator and administrator', Fossum explained. He emphasized the inner drive and conviction, which for Eriksen make research a way of life.

Habermas as an ideal

Many speakers emphasized Jürgen Habermas as a crucial role model in Eriksen's academic work.

Anders Molander told about study groups in the early 1980s, debating Habermas' most comprehensive work 'The theory of communicative action'. Communicative rationality has since been a recurring theme in Eriksen's authorship, from professional studies and management theories to political theory and supranational democracy.

Rainer Schmalz-Bruns turned to the academic interplay between Habermas and Eriksen, and how Eriksen has tried to make deliberative democratic theory empirically applicable.

'He has tried to complement Habermas' theory of communicative action with the term "working agreement", which is a weaker but more realistic form of agreement between parties. Erik's contributions are crucial in showing how the force of the better argument and the quality of dialogue are critical to reaching agreement', Schmalz-Bruns explained.

It is difficult to fulfill the criteria for achieving rational consensus according to Habermas' theory. Actors must be equally convinced and support the result of the same reasons. With his modification of the theory of communicative action, Eriksen 'discretely confronted his role model', according to Molander.

Family quarrels

Schmalz-Bruns further outlined another 'family quarrel' that has arisen between the two thinkers in recent years, concerning the democratisation of the EU. 'Habermas has faced the criticism by Erik and the other "Arenians", Schmalz-Bruns said, 'and in his latest work he tries to respond to this criticism. In sum. Habermas must himself succumb to "the force of the better argument", the German professor noted.

Rainer Schmalz-Bruns, Erik O. Eriksen and James Bohman

A selection of Eriksen's many books

Andreas Eriksen has partly followed in his father's footsteps. He presented the books 'The black hole of democracy' and 'The normativity of the EU' as examples of their common interest. In his doctoral thesis, he examines how professional roles provide actors with moral reasons. 'My father's work is a great source of inspiration and discussion', Eriksen said.

The oracle from Vesterålen

Anne Skevik Grødem told about her encounter with Eriksen as a PhD supervisor. 'He did not try to hide the fact that my empirical data about policies towards single mothers were not particularly interesting', she said. More rewarding however, was his theoretical contribution, where he contributed to what she called a 'massive light-bulb moment'. As a supervisor, he was genuinely interested in creating a room for rational deliberation. 'To me, at first, he was simply "that Habermas guy", but he would live up to his nickname "the oracle from Bø in Vesterålen". Grødem said.

The Dean's hero

'We've heard a lot about your talent and expertise here today, and your admirable academic activities. Erik, you didn't know this, but you are also my hero', the Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences, Fanny Duckert revealed. As the new Head of Department of Psychology she discovered his book 'Communicative leadership' by coincidence, while looking for literature on public sector leadership. Eriksen here explains how rational communication is critical to success for any leader in government organisations. 'The book has proven to be a great advantage for me as a leader, most notably in strategic work and processes of change. You can see that I have made frequent use of it', Duckert said, holding up a copy showing clear signs of wear and tear.

Is constitutional pluralism still relevant to make sense of the constitution of the European Union?

The European Law Journal's For and Against Series #2 was devoted to constitutional pluralism as a theory to understand the legal system of the EU and its member states.

The seminar took place as an extended ARENA Tuesday Seminar on 28 April 2015. It was staged as a debate where two speakers gave short opposing lectures on constitutional pluralism as a theory to understand EU law, followed by a discussion.

The seminar was organised by ARENA in cooperation with the European Law Journal and Editor-in-chief Agustín José Menéndez. He had invited Neil Walker from Edinburgh Law School and Julio Baquero from the European Commission's Legal Service to discuss the relevance and salience of constitutional pluralism as an analytical and conceptual tool to understand European constitutional law.

Constitutional pluralism

The theory of constitutional pluralism has been the most prominent theory to understand the relationship between national and supranational (EU) legal systems. It assumes that European law is grounded in an overlapping set of legal social practices, which presuppose different understandings of the validity basis of Community law.

While Baquero presented a criticism of the etablished theory in light of historical experience, Walker offered a defence of constitutional pluralism in his paper 'Constitutional pluralism in Europe: growing pains, geriatric infirmity or mature condition?'.

The two papers were published in the European Law Journal in 2016, where Menéndez sums up their contributions as follows: 'What the two papers render evident is that it is high time European legal scholarship transcends 'constitutionalisation' talk and actually engages with the deep constitutional issues at the core of Europe's present pledge. That may require seriously revisiting the sui generis and exceptionalist characterisations of EU law that have dominated both the pluralist and non-pluralist camps of integration and constitutional theory'.

The ELJ's For and Against Series

Most academic writing comes in the form of a long monologue. But all fundamental problems are by definition complex both in factual and in normative terms. The For and Against Series of the European Law Journal aims at thinking problems in between two opposite views. Each session is organised around one topic and two speakers who engage with each other and encourage the audience and later the readership to look at the two (or more) sides of each fundamental question being debated.

The papers are published in European Law Journal, volume 22, no. 3, May 2016

Europeanisation of gender equality policies

Is the EU's gender equality policy deteriorating? And what are the implications for Norway?

The EU's gender equality policy and its implications for the EEA country Norway were discussed at a public conference jointly organised by the Centre for Research on Gender Equality (CORE) and ARENA at the House of Literature in Oslo on 5 November 2015.

The audience were informed by scholarly lectures, and key actors from civil society, labour organisations, public administration and politics were invited to a panel debate in order to shed light on different aspects of Norway's relations with the EU in the gender equality field. State Secretary Elsbeth Tronstad (Foreign Ministry) held a keynote on Norwegian and EU gender policies with comments by Jan Erik Grindheim (European Movement) and Anne Beathe Tvinnereim (Centre Party).

Standstill and crisis

'The EU's gender equality policy is characterized by downscaling, cutbacks and marginalization', Johanna Kantola (Helsinki University) argued in her introductory keynote speech. Kantola painted a rather pessimistic picture of the development and current challenges of the EU's gender equality regime, and claimed that the regime is beginning to deteriorate due to a lack of a clear vision and distinct commitments.

The EU's gender equality policy rests on five pillars: anti-discrimination legislation, affirmative action, gender mainstreaming, action programmes, and funding. Kantola explained that these management tools have been of varying importance to EU member states because of their different starting points and policy traditions. Anti-discrimination legislation has for instance contributed to strengthening the protection against discrimination in the Nordic countries, while funding has been important for member states in Southern Europe.

All five pillars have according to Kantola been weakened over the last decade, with fewer equality directives being put forward, less allocation of money and a general lack of gender considerations in the development of EU policies. Women are also most severely hit by the economic crisis. 'The gender perspective is absent when developing the EU's austerity measures', Kantola argued.

A progressive Court

A more positive account of the EU as a gender equality promoter was given by Kirsten Ketscher (Universities of Copenhagen and Oslo). In her talk on the European Court of Justice (ECJ)'s practice and impact on gender equality, she presented a number of examples of how the ECJ has been very progressive in its interpretation of anti-discrimination law and paved the way for greater gender equality.

Cathrine Holst (left); Panel with Anita Rahore, Frøydis Patursson, Synnøve Konglevoll, Anne-Cathrine Hjertaas and Petter Sørlien at the Europeanisation of gender equality policies conference

'The European Court of Justice is both creative and innovative, and often demonstrates an unexpected interpretation style. It strengthens individual rights, and rejects interpretations that are to the detriment of the individual. The Court is, simply put, a good friend for women', Ketscher concluded.

Gender research at ARENA

Helena Seibicke (ARENA) presented some insights from her PhD project on the European Women's Lobby, while Cathrine Holst (CORE and ARENA), who organised the event, discussed the EU and gender equality policy in Norwegian government reports.

The way forward

The conference revealed that the EU's influence on Norway's gender equality policy is significant. At the same time, the Norwegian form of EU affiliation makes it difficult to influence EU policies. The lack of participation rights entails that other channels must be used if Norway is to put its mark on the European gender equality policy.

However, the conditions for lobbying are challenging. Frøydis Patursson from the organisation Legal Aid for Women (JURK) was of the opinion that lobbying at the EU level is very resource-demanding. 'With limited resources we rather prioritize the UN system, where civil society has a much more obvious place than at the EU level', Patursson said.

Mari Teigen, head of CORE, concluded that regardless of the development, it is important to make use of every available room for maneuver if Norway wants to influence the direction of European gender equality policy.

An evolving EU administration

Morten Egeberg and Jarle Trondal presented research on the development of a European administrative space to public servants, with the active participation of state secretaries.

The Delegation of Norway to the EU, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) and the Ministry of Local Government and Modernisation invited to a seminar on 'a new European administration?' in Oslo on 23 April 2015. Ingvild Næss Stub, State Secretary to the Minister of EU/EEA affairs and Paul Chaffey, State Secretary to the Minister of Local Government and Modernisation held introductions and participated actively at the one-day seminar, which was held in a crowded auditorium in the government buildings.

Towards a European administration?

ARENA's Morten Egeberg and Jarle Trondal held lectures on the proliferation of new administrative systems in the EU. Through comprehensive empirical studies they find evidence that a European administrative space is developing under the direction of the European Commission. This is taking place through the establishment of agencies, networks and other kinds of close and extensive cooperation between the Commission and national agencies.

National ministries on the other hand, are often not part of this cooperation. In this way, national directorates and supervisory authorities acquire a 'two-hatted' role as part of a national as well as a European administration. The cooperation encompasses, to a large extent and in different ways, the development of new regulations and policies, which means that subunits acquire a more prominent role in EEA-related work.

The impact of this development is further strengthened by increased freedom of national agencies and the use of new forms of regulations, with less use of binding regulations (hard law) and more use of non-binding regulations (soft law).

Great interest with the public administration

'The active and enthusiastic discussions at the seminar confirmed that this is a very important issue for the public administration, and pointed to weaknesses as well as good examples of how to organise the cooperation', the government wrote in its summary of the seminar.

State Secretary Chaffey wrote the following on his blog after the event: 'Late April I attended a full seminar on Norway's relations with EU institutions. This is more peculiar than it may sound, for although I open or introduce quite a few seminars and conferences, I can rarely spend several hours listening to introductions by experts and discussions between ministries and directorates about how they work together on European issues on a daily basis'.

Europe in Transition

On 4 November, the Research Council of Norway organised the seminar 'Europe in Transition: Developments in the EU and impacts for Norway'.

The seminar was part of the Research Council's Europe in Transition initiative, which seeks to promote high-quality Europe-related research, generate new knowledge about Europe in crisis as well as to promote effective management of Norway's relations with the EU.

The seminar was set up as a venue where researchers from the three projects funded under this programme presented their research to different stakeholder groups. From ARENA, John Erik Fossum presented a status report on the EuroDiv project (see p. 2).

Two research areas of the project were presented in more detail: Helene Sjursen discussed how Norway's affiliation with the EU in the domain of foreign and security policy is problematic from a democratic point of view; and Morten Egeberg gave a presentation on national administrative soveregignty embedded in a multilevel administrative architecture, and how national sovereignty is under pressure.

Independence under hegemony?

A collective volume investigating the relationship between the EU and neighbouring states affiliated with the Union was released in 2015.

The 2014 Norwegian constitutional bicentennial served as a catalyst to investigate the state of democracy in Norway. As a follow-up, Erik O. Eriksen and John Erik Fossum wanted to investigate the state of affairs of other EU-associated non-members.

The EU has a range of associations with its neighbouring countries, either because these do not want full EU membership, or because they do not qualify for it. The results of the cross-national study are published in the book 'The EU's non-members: independence under hegemony?' (see p. 14).

The EEA Agreement as a blueprint

Norway, Switzerland and Iceland are studied indepth, as well as the range of agreements between the EU and associated countries. The book indicates that the different agreements have become more complex as European integration covers ever more sectors. The EU increasingly refers to the dynamic EEA as the ideal model for neighbours seeking access to the European market. It has effective solutions for a dvnamic adaptation to the evolving EU legislation. The other neighbourhood models of deep economic integration have reached their limits, as they lack efficient arrangements for ensuring market homogeneity.

Sovereignty lost regardless of model

The volume further asks whether states closely affiliated with the EU, but which have chosen not to be full members, experience effects on their legal and political self-governing capabilities. Eriksen and Fossum conclude that the reality on the ground is quite similar despite important formal differences between these countries. Regardless of the association model with the EU, non-members experience a loss of sovereignty.

The EU's closely associated non-members exist under a form of 'self-inflicted hegemony'. This problem becomes more manifest the closer and more formalised the association is, the editors argue.

The UK, a once and future (?) non-member

The book also offers an analysis of the historical factors which have contributed to tensions between the UK and the EU in a chapter by Christopher Lord. In light of the current debate on the UK's EU membership and the upcoming Brexit referendum in 2016, the book proved to be of great current interest.

The lessons from associated non-members offered in the volume were highly relevant and contributed to enlighten the issues at stake for Britain. Findings were discussed at several events in Norway, Iceland and the UK throughout the year.

Will Britain end up like Norway?

What are the alternatives to full EU membership for the UK? What can Britain learn from current non-members?

On 26 October 2015, ARENA hosted a public event in association with the British Politics Society. Around 60 people met at the House of Literature in Oslo to engage in a panel discussion on Britain's future.

Britain is often identified as an 'awkward' and reluctant EU member state. The relationship is now at a crossroads, following Prime Minister David Cameron's promise to renegotiate the terms for Britain's EU membership and to hold a national referendum. But what are the British alternatives to full membership and what can Britain learn from current non-members?

The discussions revolved around analyses from the recent book 'The EU's non-members: independence under hegemony?' (see p. 14), which is co-edited by John Erik Fossum, who also chaired the event.

In this book, Christopher Lord analyses the UK's troubled relationship with the EU since the 1950s. He started out by outlining four possible futures for Britain after the EU referendum, which he called: (a) completely in; (b) in but not completely in; (c) out but not completely out; and (d) completely out. He went on to show how (b) and (c) have claims to historical continuity with previous British relationships with European integration.

In the panel was also Isabelle Hertner

(University of Birmingham), who discussed Germany's view on the UK referendum and Chancellor Angela Merkel's key role in the British government's attempt to renegotiate the UK's membership terms.

Two prevailing 'tales of Norwegian outsidership' were found by Kristin M. Haugevik (NUPI) in the current British political discourse. She also looked at potential implications for Norway of a Brexit.

All panelists had contributed to the August issue of British Politics Review, bearing the title 'Still with Europe, but not of it? Taking stock of Britain's European debate'.

What is the EU good for?

What makes the EU keep on working when confronted with crises and conflicts, disappointments and setbacks?

Erik O. Eriksen sheds light on the EU as an idea and concept in his newest book, which is published in Norwegian with the title 'What is the EU good for?' (see p. 16). The book was launched at a fullypacked debate organised by the publisher Cappelen Damm in Oslo on 23 September 2015.

The event 'Hvorfor klikker ingen på EU?' [Why doesn't anyone click on the EU?] also discussed a second book written by journalists Alf Ole Ask and Dag Yngland. The two books were discussed by authors Eriksen and Ask, as well as Norwegian Minister for EU and EEA affairs Vidar Helgesen.

Among the themes discussed by the panelists were the lack of openness and debate on Norway's ongoing EU adaptation, and whether media contribute to the democratic deficit by giving less priority to the EU. Norway has refused EU membership twice, yet thousands of EU laws have been implemented through the EEA Agreement.

'We are living in a lobby democracy', Eriksen argued. 'The politicians have to take responsibility. Brits state that they should by no means end up in the same situation as Norway'. Minister Helgesen admitted that the EEA Agreement represents an uncomfortable situation for Norwegian politicians. 'This is why we don't like to talk about it that much. However, the prospect of a new EU debate is even more uncomfortable', he said.

Eriksen provided some explanations on the rationale behind European integration, and why it is difficult for member states to withdraw from this 'locked-in cooperation'. He identified the normative commitments that the EU is founded on: human rights, impartiality, democracy, and dignity.

Reclaiming the normative foundations of the EU

Erik O. Eriksen was invited to discuss his latest book The Normativity of the European Union at a seminar in Brussels on 23 February 2015.

In November 2014, Erik O. Eriksen published the book in German 'Die Normativität der Europäischen Union' with Verlag Karl Alber. At the seminar Reclaiming the Normative Foundations of the EU, he presented his analyses and ideas to the Brussels public. The event was organised by the Minister for Federal and European Affairs of the State of Hessen and the Goethe University Frankfurt.

The European Union is currently in a major crisis, maybe the greatest crisis since its inception. Against this backdrop, it is important to reasses and redefine the normative foundations of this transnational political organisation. In his talk, Eriksen critically reconstructed the principles that formed the basis of the European integration process so far.

Eriksen's pragmatist approach allows for a new dynamic understanding of this process. This approach no longer draws on classic and stiff categories like sovereignty or political self-determination, but understands the gradual formation of the European Union as a process of reflexive integration. Eriksen demonstrated how the principles of democracy, deliberation, justice, rule of law and solidarity are combined in a normative structure that drives the process of integration.

At the same time he pointed to the threat that in the course of the current crisis, a lasting arbitrary rule develops, in which the economically strong states force far-reaching structural adjustment programmes on the weaker ones. Eriksen concluded by pointing out where the normative resources of European integration are that can be brought into position against such a reversion to the interest-driven politics of single states.

Mark Weinmeister, the State Secretary for European Affairs of the State of Hessen and Matthias Lutz-Bachmann. Vice President for Research at Goethe University Frankfurt held welcoming remarks. Jo Leinen, Member of the European Parliament, commented on Eriksen's scholarly presentation.

Prizes and nominations

Professor Emeritus Johan P. Olsen was elected fellow of the US National Academy of Public Administration.

Professor emeritus Johan P. Olsen has been elected fellow of the US National Academy of Public Administration (NAPA) in Washington, DC. He is the only European in the latest class of NAPA fellows, who were formally inducted on 3 December 2015 at the Academy's annual conference in Crystal City in Arlington, Virginia.

Established in 1967, NAPA consists of professional and academic leaders in public management, and is chartered by the US Congress to assist federal, state and local governments in improving their effectiveness, efficiency and accountability.

The academy names only a limited number of fellows each year. The fellows include former cabinet officers, Members of Congress, governors, mayors, state legislators, as well as prominent scholars, business executives, and public administrators.

The distinguished fellowship is a recognition of Johan P. Olsen's outstanding record of public administration scholarship. Olsen was the founding director of ARENA, which was established on his initiative as the research programme 'Advanced Research on the Europeanisation of the Nation-State' by the Norwegian Research Council in 1994. Since 2007, he has been professor emeritus at ARENA.

Hans-Jörg Trenz received a best-article prize from the Journal of Common Market Studies.

The 2013 Best Article Prize of the Journal of Common Market Studies was awarded to Hans-Jörg Trenz and Paul Statham in 2015 for their article: 'How EU politicisation can emerge through contestation: the constitution case'. The article was published in the iournal's September 2013 issue.

The jury considered this to be 'a very impressive empirical work that is well presented and that makes a clear contribution to our knowledge in this field. The topic is highly relevant, both from a scientific and policy perspective. The approach employed in this paper is considered highly innovative and very well executed.'

Organisation and staff

Personnel and economy

As a research centre based at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Oslo, the main part of ARENA's budget is financed by external funding sources. In 2015, the centre's main sources of external funding were the Research Council of Norway, the Norwegian Ministry of Defence and the Norwegian Ministry of Local Government and Modernisation.
