

Evaluation of SOS/SGO 9001 Autumn 22

We discussed the format and outcome of the course with the PhD-candidates in the concluding session of the course. At a later stage we asked the participants to reply to some questions in an evaluation form. Of the four candidates who attended the course, three replied in writing. The candidates were pleased with the course: 'the structure worked out fine'; 'a very useful course that was organised in a good way'; 'the number of participants is good, we can read each other's texts and give feedback'. One suggested more information about what is required by article-based theses, especially the Introduction part, and monographs. We will follow up on this partly in the course and partly in separate more social seminars. We will also specify what we mean by 'project description', i.e. that it is the project description they submitted when admitted to PhD program or an update that we are going to discuss in the course.
