Research projects

My ongoing doctoral work is an extension of my MA-thesis on the economic upper class in Norway. In my Ph.D. I aim to analyze structures of marriage and kinship in the upper class, with an emphasis on how economic success is related to these structures. Moreover, I will analyze the upper class' relation to the education system, more specifically the role (prestigious) education plays in the intergenerational reproduction of the upper class. The project is inspired by the work of Pierre Bourdieu and John Scott. It is based on quantitative analysis of registry data. Many techniques are applied: multiple correspondence analysis, regression analysis, cluster analysis, classification/regression trees etc.

My doctoral work is funded by the Department of Sociology and Human Geography, but conducted in cooperation with the Norwegian Research Council funded project Elites in an Egalitarian Society.
