In this course, we had ten sessions, part lecture (around one hour) and part seminar (around one hour). In the seminar part, the students discussed questions related to the topic of the lecture in small groups. The students had to hand in reading memos (compulsory activity), and the examination was an open book, three-hour school exam.

The students noted that they wanted more "real-world" examples to illustrate concepts and theories during the lectures. They also noted that they wanted to have discussions throughout the lecture, instead of having a one-hour lecture and one-hour discussion. I agree with both of these suggestions.
