The Peace and Conflict Studies (PECOS) program provides opportunities for students to acquire practical work experience in the field of peace and conflict through completing an internship. The students are expected to assist with various tasks, but a main component should include performing analytic tasks (such as research assistance) to support their host institution.

The scope of the work must be equivalent to six weeks' full-time study. One week of full time study equals the same as one week full time work (37,5 hours per week). The writing of the internship report should be included in these hours. The students shall receive no remuneration for the work. Exceptions in the form of a living stipend for internships abroad may be approved by the program director. The internship may, but does not have to be, linked to the student's master's thesis. Each student is only granted one internship. Completion of an internship approved for the course PECOS4006 will result in 10 ECTS.

The work tasks are determined in collaboration with each host institution. Examples of relevant tasks may include:

- Information gathering and investigation
- Analysis and presentation
- Report writing
- Organizing conferences and seminars

Knowledge

Students will:

- Gain insight into the practical relevance of political science in general, and peace and conflict studies specifically, in a potential future workplace.
- Apply knowledge and research skills acquired through course work to contemporary issues and challenges related to (international) peace and conflict dynamics.

Skills

Students will:

- Apply analytical competences gained during their studies to perform research and organizational tasks.
- Develop problem-solving strategies based on specific real-world scenarios encountered during the internship.
- Further develop their ability to collaborate and communicate with colleagues, superiors, and partners in the host institution
- Critically assess how the analytical methodological techniques gained during their studies contributed to their effectiveness in the internship role.

General Competencies

Students will:

- Reflect on their personal and professional growth during the internship, identifying key areas of development.
- Integrate insights from the internship to plan future career paths in field of peace and conflict.
- Demonstrate the ability to transfer academic knowledge to practical scenarios in a professional context.

Annet

"Admission to the course"
The course is restricted to students enrolled in the Peace and Conflict Studies program. For detailed information about the admission process, please refer to the PECOS4006 - Internship Procedures page (link).

"Recommended previous knowledge"
Section will be updated with "PECOS4025 – Analytic perspectives on peace and conflict" and "PECOS4022 – Applied Statistics for Peace and Conflict Studies."

Endringene kort forklart:

The changes on the course page for PECOS4006 include updates to the "course content," "learning outcomes," "recommended previous knowledge," and "admission to the course." While the course itself remains unchanged, we have clarified the information to better reflect what students were already expected to learn. These updates aim to clearly communicate the course objectives and expectations. We have removed the detailed administrative routines for admission and will instead provide a link to an external page for that information. The "recommended previous knowledge" section has been updated with PECOS4025 and PECOS4022. The changes are made in collaboration with the work life relevance team at the department.
