

Evaluation of PSY4405 – Fall 2025

The evaluation of the course PSY4405 – Leadership, Teams, and Communication is based on the feedback of 11 Master's students for the first two parts and 1 student for the last part. The reason for this is that the teachers decided not to provide the link/QR code for the evaluation during the course and asking students to complete the evaluation via Canvas after the end of the course usually results in low feedback rates. As a result, this report mostly focuses on the feedback provided for the first two parts.

The leadership and teams parts of the course were taught by another teacher this year than in previous years, but using the material developed by those regularly teaching this course.

The students positively commented on the relevance of the topics (Mean = 1.1), that attending the course led to noticeable increases in knowledge (Mean = 1.4), that there was sufficient discussion (Mean = 1.4), and that communicative teaching methods were used (Mean = 1.0). Overall, the students reported that the course is well worth attending (Mean = 1.3). The teacher received very positive feedback, including being able to convey the content clearly (Mean = 1.2), being able to explain in a structured way (Mean = 1.1), ensuring a respectful learning atmosphere (Mean = 1.0), and providing helpful feedback to the students (Mean = 1.2). The students also positively commented on the teacher's abilities to instill fundamental confidence in the students' abilities (Mean = 1.1) and to respond to the students' interests (Mean = 1.2).

Based on the one response for the communication part of the course, it is not possible to draw inferences.

Based on the feedback provided, there will not be changes to the structure of this course for fall 2026. However, the evaluation of the communication part also needs to take place in the classroom next time.
